International Bullying Prevention Association Invites Coach Randy to Present

"Bullying in Sports"

Livingston, NJ - Randy Nathan (aka Coach Randy) President of Project NextGen in Livingston, NJ received a formal invitation to present his "Bullying in Sports" workshop at the 9th Annual Conference of the International Bullying Prevention Association in Kansas City, Missouri in November. Coach Randy has just completed offering an introductory version of this workshop at four Sports Authority locations in northern and central New Jersey. Coach Randy is a certified Olweus trainer and anti-bullying expert in the Tri-State area and is considered the anti-bullying expert for Fox 5's Good Day NY. In addition he works with schools, coaches, students and teams throughout the state implementing and understanding the impact of bullying in sports. The mission of the International Bullying Prevention Association (IBPA) is to support and enhance quality research based bullying prevention principles and best practices in order to achieve a safe school climate, healthy work environment, good citizenship and civic responsibility. The IBPA's annual conference anticipates more than 700 participants and provides excellent learning and professional development opportunities for those involved in bullying prevention. This year's theme is "The Courage to Act: Working Together to End Bullying." Many of the workshops presented in breakout sessions offer current evidence-supported best practices, practical techniques for use in the classroom and school grounds, the latest research, and an opportunity to network with colleagues from all over the United States and around the world.
